

Mathematics Education Position, Tenure-Track

Department of Mathematics and Statistics

James Madison University

Harrisonburg, VA

The Department of Mathematics and Statistics at James Madison University invites applications for a tenure-track position in mathematics education, starting August 2016. Candidates should be invested in the teaching and improvement of mathematics content courses for prospective PreK-8 teachers. Candidates should have research interests in some area of PreK-12 mathematics education, including teacher education. Candidates must have a doctoral degree in mathematics education; a master's degree or equivalent in mathematics or statistics is preferred. The successful applicant will join a growing number of mathematics educators in the department. Collaboration with current mathematics education faculty in the department and in the College of Education is encouraged.

James Madison University, located in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, is a comprehensive, coeducational state university with an approximate enrollment of 20,000 students. The mathematics education group at JMU includes active scholars in mathematics education as well as mathematicians interested in PreK-12 mathematics education. The department teaches mathematics majors with secondary education minors as well as PreK-8 prospective teachers in an interdisciplinary major. The department also offers an M. Ed in Mathematics for current secondary mathematics teachers. Teaching of mathematics methods courses may be arranged on request through exchanges with the JMU College of Education. For additional information, see the department homepage at www.jmu.edu/mathstat/
