

Mathematics Education, One-Year Visiting Lecturer Position

Department of Mathematics and Statistics

James Madison University

Harrisonburg, VA

The Department of Mathematics and Statistics at James Madison University invites applications for a visiting lecturer position in mathematics education for one year starting August 2020. The successful applicant will join several mathematics educators in the department. The mathematics education group at JMU includes active scholars in mathematics education as well as mathematicians interested in PreK-12 mathematics education. The department teaches mathematics majors with secondary education minors as well as PreK-8 prospective teachers in an interdisciplinary major. For additional information about the department, see the department homepage at www.jmu.edu/mathstat/

Candidates should be invested in the teaching and improvement of mathematics content courses for prospective elementary and middle grades. Candidates should at a minimum have a master's degree in mathematics or mathematics education (or the equivalent) by the time of the appointment. We are especially interested in candidates who have a demonstrated commitment towards building an equitable and diverse scholarly environment. Primary teaching responsibilities (up to 12 hours per semester) will include mathematics and statistics courses for pre-service elementary and middle grades teachers.

James Madison University, located in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, is a comprehensive public university with an approximate enrollment of more than 20,000 students. JMU is regarded as one of the best regional universities in the nation and has been continuously cited in U.S. News and World Report, Changing Times and Money Magazine as an outstanding public university. Located in the city of Harrisonburg, we are approximately 120 miles from Washington, D.C. and Richmond, VA. Known for its livability, diversity, local food, arts and natural surroundings, this Virginia Main Street community is a great place to live and work.
